

 Address: 320 East 11th Street

Timeline Summary

- 1815 – Classified as an "Empty lot"
Source: (1815) The Blue Book
 - Indicates the lot was undeveloped in the early 19th century.
- 1853 – Described as a "Brick or stone dwelling, first class (slate or tin roof)"
Source: (1853) Perris Maps
 - Represents a high-quality residential structure, suggesting relative affluence or prestige compared to nearby properties.
- 1867 – Noted simply as "Structure Existed"
Source: (1867) Dripps Plan
 - Confirms ongoing occupation and continuity from the mid-19th century.
- 1885 – Labeled a "Stone building" (repeated in entry)
Source: (1885) Robinson Atlas
 - Suggests the durability and permanence of the structure were maintained or upgraded.
- 1897 – Identified as a "Brick building, 4 Stories, Basement"
Source: (1897) Bromleys Atlas
 - Marks significant urban growth with a multi-story structure—likely housing multiple residential units or a combination of uses.

Summary Interpretation (Strictly from Data)

- 320 East 11th Street developed earlier and with more architectural quality than many of its neighboring lots, with a first-class brick or stone dwelling by 1853.
- The structure matured over time into a substantial 4-story brick building with a basement by 1897, consistent with the densification seen across East 11th Street in this period.
- The property maintained a trajectory of early, high-quality development and consistent structural upgrading, suggesting a stable or valued position within the urban landscape.